Reading · The Square's Trial Weekend

The town square will be closed to private cars for one trial weekend next month. Temporary benches will be placed near the trees, and a marked delivery route will be kept open before ten each morning. The permanent parking layout will not be changed during the trial. That distinction matters because some residents have read the announcement as a final decision. Visitor numbers, shop sales and access problems will be recorded, but no single measure will determine the outcome. A busy square may benefit cafes while creating difficulties for other businesses. The report will therefore include comments from traders, disabled visitors and delivery drivers. Supporters want the experiment to succeed, yet a useful trial must be allowed to reveal problems. If every difficulty is dismissed as resistance, the evidence loses value. The mayor says the square will receive temporary furniture, not a temporary guarantee that everyone will agree. At least the benches should make the disagreement more comfortable.

Listening · The Library Card Change

Manager: New library cards will be introduced in November. Existing memberships will be transferred automatically.
Reader: Will people lose their borrowing history?
Manager: No. That information will be kept unless a reader asks for it to be removed. Personal details won't be displayed on the public catalogue.
Reader: Some older members may struggle with the online form.
Manager: Paper forms will be provided at the desk, and staff will help during two drop-in sessions each week.
Reader: Good. A digital improvement shouldn't make familiar services harder to reach.
Manager: Exactly. The old cards won't be switched off until the help sessions have run for a month.
Reader: How will members hear about that?
Manager: Notices will be posted in the building and sent with loan reminders. We will also explain the change at the desk. A new card should open access, not become a tiny plastic test of computer confidence.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada maydon sinovi e’lonini tushuntiring: uch kelajak ish, bir qilinmaydigan ish va baholash cheklovi.

Mezon: Uch will be + V3 bor. · Won't be + V3 aniq chegarani bildiradi. · Bir natija mezonining cheklovi tushuntiriladi.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda kutubxona kartasi o‘zgarishini foydalanuvchilarga tushuntiring.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · Future Passive tasdiq va inkori mavjud. · Raqamli va qog‘oz yo‘llari hamda muddat aniq.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

New library cards will be introduced in November, and current memberships will be transferred automatically. Borrowing history will be retained unless a reader requests its removal. Personal details will not be shown in the public catalogue. Paper forms will be available for members who prefer them, and help will be offered twice a week. Old cards will not be disabled until those sessions have been running for a month. This gradual change should protect access while the system improves. Notices will be displayed in the library and included with loan reminders. Staff should also explain the process personally, because a written announcement does not reach every reader equally well.

Reading · A Notice Worth Reading

The housing office plans to replace the noticeboards in six apartment buildings. When will the new boards be installed? The published schedule says the work will begin on Monday, but gives no order for individual buildings. Residents also want to know how old notices will be handled. Important information must be copied before the boards are removed. Private phone numbers should not be displayed without permission, and commercial advertisements cannot be added by anyone who happens to find an empty corner. The office initially focused on colour and size. Those choices matter, but they do not answer questions about responsibility. A board can be designed beautifully and still be managed badly. The revised plan names a contact person for each building and explains how notices can be submitted. It also leaves space for handwritten community messages. Clear rules should protect useful communication without turning a request for a borrowed ladder into a formal research application.

Listening · The Shared Recording Equipment

Producer: When will the new recorder be delivered?
Coordinator: On Wednesday. It can be borrowed after the introductory session on Friday.
Producer: Can the files be stored on our own computers?
Coordinator: Yes, but participants' permission must be recorded first. Private interviews mustn't be shared in the public folder.
Producer: Where will the training materials be posted?
Coordinator: On the club page, with a printed copy at reception. The device can also be demonstrated in person.
Producer: That helps. Some members learn better by trying the controls.
Coordinator: Exactly. The equipment should be accessible, but recordings need careful handling. A convenient folder is not automatically an appropriate audience.
Producer: I'll make a project folder and check permissions before sharing anything.
Coordinator: Good. We bought a recorder to preserve voices, not to give every private conversation an accidental public performance. That protects both interviewers and guests.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada umumiy qurilma qoidalarini muhokama qiling: ikki kelajak savoli, ruxsat va taqiq.

Mezon: When/Where will … be V3 savoli bor. · Can/must be + V3 to‘g‘ri. · Mustn't be + V3 aniq ma’lumotni himoya qiladi.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda e’lon doskalarini boshqarish qoidalarini dalil bilan yozing.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z yozilgan. · Kamida uch modal passiv bor. · Mas’ul va muddat haqidagi savollar aniq.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Before the old noticeboards are removed, important information must be copied. Residents should be told when each building will receive its replacement. Private phone numbers must not be displayed without permission, and commercial notices should be checked by a named contact person. Community messages can be submitted through that person or left at the housing office. The board should still allow simple handwritten requests, because not every useful message needs a polished design. Clear management matters as much as the board's colour or size. The final notice should answer two questions directly: when will installation happen, and who will be responsible for keeping the information current?

Reading · The Repair Shop Window

When I visited the repair shop on Tuesday, an old radio was being examined on the main bench. Two chairs were being sanded near the window. I asked whether the radio could be repaired economically. The technician explained that a replacement part might cost more than a similar second-hand radio. Could the original case be kept while the inside was replaced? Technically, yes, but the owner valued its original sound as well as its appearance. The decision was therefore not only financial. While we talked, the owner arrived with a photograph of his father using the radio. That did not make every repair price reasonable, but it explained why a simple cost comparison was incomplete. The technician offered a written estimate and two options. Good repair advice should make choices clearer, not decide how much another person's memory is worth. The radio remained silent, but the conversation around it was unusually informative.

Listening · The Event Setup Review

Organiser: Could the stage be moved closer to the wall next time?
Technician: Possibly. When I arrived yesterday, it was being assembled in the middle because the wall sockets were being checked.
Organiser: Could the cables be covered more securely?
Technician: Yes. Extra covers can be hired. The team was being shown the cable route when the first musicians arrived, which interrupted the briefing.
Organiser: So an earlier setup would help.
Technician: It would, but we also need a clear handover. People shouldn't guess which checks are complete.
Organiser: Can the final inspection be recorded on one sheet?
Technician: Certainly. Name the person responsible for each item and leave space for unresolved issues.
Organiser: That sounds more useful than simply writing 'all fine'.
Technician: Exactly. A check sheet should describe reality, not offer the room an encouraging compliment before the audience walks in.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada radio ta’miri variantlarini so‘rang; tashrif paytidagi ikki jarayonni tasvirlang.

Mezon: Ikki Can/Could … be V3 savoli bor. · Was/were being + V3 bilan ikki jarayon bor. · Narxdan tashqari bir mezon asoslangan.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda sahna o‘rnatish jarayoni bo‘yicha tavsiya yozing.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · O‘tgan jarayon va modal savol to‘g‘ri. · Ikki amaliy chora sabab bilan berilgan.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

When the technician arrived, the stage was being assembled away from the wall because the sockets were being checked. The cable route was being explained when musicians interrupted the briefing. Could setup begin earlier next time? That would help, but timing alone would not solve every problem. Extra cable covers can be hired, and the final inspection can be recorded on one sheet. Each item should name the responsible person and show any unresolved issue. A general statement that everything is fine gives little useful information. A clear handover would help the next team understand what has been checked and what still needs attention before the audience arrives.

Reading · The Hall before the Meeting

When the residents arrived, the hall was not being cleaned as the booking email had suggested. Cleaning had been completed at noon, and the chairs had been arranged before three. The room was locked because a missing key had caused a delay. Was the entrance being repaired? No; a contractor was working on the office door farther along the corridor. Several people connected the visible tools with the locked hall and assumed the wrong cause. The organiser eventually found the spare key in a labelled cabinet. Afterwards, we compared the booking message with the actual sequence of events. It described an activity that was no longer happening and omitted the person responsible for opening the room. We changed the handover note to show completed tasks, current work and the key holder separately. A useful update should explain time as well as activity. Otherwise, yesterday's instruction can become today's very convincing misunderstanding.

Listening · The Packing Room Check

Supervisor: Was the order being packed when you arrived at nine?
Assistant: No, it wasn't being packed then. The boxes had been sealed before my shift started.
Supervisor: Had the labels been printed too?
Assistant: Yes. They had been placed beside the boxes, but nobody had attached them.
Supervisor: So the order was not ready for collection.
Assistant: Correct. The driver was waiting, and I initially thought the labels on the desk belonged to another order.
Supervisor: Was the packing area being used by another team?
Assistant: No. The confusion came from the status note. It said 'packed', which sounded complete.
Supervisor: We need separate stages for sealed, labelled and ready to collect.
Assistant: Agreed. One short word was doing three jobs badly. A little more detail would have saved the driver from a long discussion with a pile of anonymous boxes.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada zal tayyorligi haqidagi chalkashlikni vaqt ketma-ketligida izohlang.

Mezon: Bir was/were being savoli va inkori bor. · Had been + V3 bilan oldingi ish berilgan. · Ko‘rinadigan dalil va asl sabab farqlangan.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda buyurtma holatini qayd etish uchun tahliliy tavsiya yozing.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z yozilgan. · Past Perfect va davomiy passiv farqlangan. · Jarayonning uch bosqichi va asos bor.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The order was not being packed when the assistant arrived at nine. The boxes had been sealed before the shift began, and the labels had been printed. However, the labels were still on the desk, so the order was not ready for collection. The status word packed hid that unfinished step. We should use separate labels for sealed, labelled and ready to collect. A final check should connect each box with its delivery information. This change would give both staff and drivers a clearer picture of progress. Short updates are useful only when their meaning is shared. Otherwise, saving a few words can create a much longer delay.

Reading · The Exhibition Credit

A photograph in our exhibition carried the wrong photographer's name. The image had been donated by a family member, but the original creator had not been identified before printing. Had the donation form been checked? Yes, although the form named the donor rather than the photographer. Those roles had been treated as identical. A visitor recognised the picture and contacted the actual photographer, who was disappointed but willing to help correct the record. The label was replaced, and an explanation was added to the exhibition page. We did not simply remove the mistake quietly. The photographer wanted the correction to be visible because credit was part of the work's history. Our new form separates creator, donor and rights contact. It takes longer to complete, but the extra distinctions matter. A name beneath a picture is not decorative furniture. It tells readers whose effort they are seeing and whose permission may be needed.

Listening · The Group Tickets

Leader: Had our seats been reserved before the payment deadline?
Agent: The request had been entered by your colleague, but the seats hadn't been confirmed. Payment was still missing.
Leader: I thought the email was a confirmation.
Agent: It was an acknowledgement of the request. The subject line was not clear enough, and I understand the confusion.
Leader: Had a reminder been sent?
Agent: Yes, but it went to the address on the form. Your colleague says that mailbox is no longer checked.
Leader: Then both our details and your wording need attention.
Agent: Agreed. I can offer another departure with enough seats, but it leaves an hour later.
Leader: Please hold it while I contact the group.
Agent: I will send a message explicitly marked 'held, not paid'. We should not make a booking depend on interpreting polite but ambiguous language.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada surat mualliflig‘i tekshiruvini qayta qurib ayting va bajaruvchilarni by bilan aniqlang.

Mezon: Had … been savoli bor. · Hadn't been + V3 to‘g‘ri. · By bilan donor va muallif farqi saqlanadi.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda surat yorlig‘i xatosidan keyingi tuzatish tamoyilini yozing.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · Ikki Past Perfect Passive va bir inkor bor. · Rol farqi va oshkora tuzatish sababi aniq.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The photographer had not been identified before the exhibition label was printed. The donation form had been checked, but it named the donor, not the creator. A family member had supplied the image, and the team incorrectly treated that person as its photographer. The correction should therefore be visible rather than quietly replacing one name with another. Credit forms part of the picture's history. Our new form should distinguish creator, donor and permission contact. Each role answers a different question. This will add work at the beginning, but it will reduce confusion later and show respect for the people whose images make the exhibition possible.

Reading · The Reopening Report

The swimming pool will be reopened only after the final inspection. New filters have already been fitted, and damaged tiles were being replaced when the residents' committee visited on Tuesday. The changing rooms were not being used during that work. Had the emergency signs been checked before the visit? The manager showed a signed record confirming that they had. However, the accessible entrance had not been tested by users with mobility needs. The committee recommended a practical visit rather than relying only on measurements. Small difficulties can be missed on a drawing. The manager agreed that the route could be assessed by a local access group before opening. The report therefore records substantial progress without calling the pool ready. Some residents want a firm date, which is understandable after a long closure. Still, a date should follow completed checks rather than pressure staff to describe unfinished work as complete. A reopened door is useful only when people can actually get through it.

Listening · The Festival Equipment Audit

Auditor: Will the borrowed speakers be returned tomorrow?
Organiser: Yes. They must be checked before transport. One cable was being repaired when I left the workshop.
Auditor: Had the equipment list been updated before collection?
Organiser: Most of it had, but the extra microphone hadn't been added. It was supplied by the school at the last minute.
Auditor: Can that be corrected now?
Organiser: Yes. The microphone is here, and the school has confirmed its number.
Auditor: Good. The return record should show each item and its condition. Was anything being used during the final count?
Organiser: No. Everything was on the table, though two cases were closed.
Auditor: Then open them and check the contents. An empty case can look impressively complete from outside.
Organiser: Agreed. We need evidence of the equipment, not just a tidy photograph of its luggage.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada jihoz auditi uchun o‘tgan jarayon, oldingi tugallanish va kelgusi majburiyatni ayting.

Mezon: Uch xil kengaytirilgan passiv zamon bor. · Modal passiv bilan tekshiruv talabi bor. · Hujjat va haqiqiy buyum holati farqlangan.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda hovuz ochilishidan oldingi tekshiruv haqida xolis xulosa yozing.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z yozilgan. · Kamida uch xil passiv shakl to‘g‘ri. · Dalil, qolgan ish va tavsiya ajratilgan.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The pool should not be described as ready until the remaining checks are complete. New filters have been fitted, and damaged tiles were being replaced during Tuesday's visit. Emergency signs had been checked, but the accessible entrance had not been tested by people with mobility needs. That route can be assessed by a local access group before reopening. Measurements are useful, yet they may miss practical difficulties.

A firm opening date will be welcomed by residents, but it should follow evidence rather than replace it. The report should show completed work, outstanding checks and responsible people. This gives the public a clearer basis for judging progress and trusting the eventual reopening.

The town's photography exhibition will be opened on Friday, but one section may remain closed. The display boards have been delivered, and the captions are being checked by the photographers. The organiser says the lighting should have been tested yesterday. It was not: the electrician was called to an urgent job elsewhere. Visitors are expected to follow a marked route while the final section is prepared. A newspaper described the show as 'fully approved', although only the route through the completed rooms has been inspected. The organiser has asked for that sentence to be corrected. The event can open in a limited form without pretending that every planned feature is available.

Reading · Two Accounts of One Meeting

After the residents' meeting, two summaries appeared in our group chat. One said the caretaker was against the new garden. The other said he supported it. I had taken notes, so I checked his actual words. He said he liked the idea but did not have time to water the beds every evening. He told the committee he could help with repairs at weekends. His objection concerned responsibility, not the garden itself. Both summaries had removed the condition that made his position understandable. I posted a fuller account and asked the writers to correct their messages. Neither had intended to mislead anyone; each had remembered the part that matched an existing opinion. Reporting speech is therefore more than changing pronouns and verbs. It requires selecting fairly. Our final minutes recorded support for the garden and a request for a separate watering team. A useful summary should shorten a discussion without shrinking the people in it into convenient labels.

Listening · The Customer's Actual Complaint

Assistant: The customer said the whole workshop was useless.
Manager: Did she use those words?
Assistant: Not exactly. She said she didn't understand the online instructions. She told me the practical demonstration was helpful.
Manager: Then we should keep both points. Otherwise, we might change the wrong part of the service.
Assistant: She also said she wanted more time to practise before the final task.
Manager: That's a specific request. Did she say the tutor was unhelpful?
Assistant: No. She said he answered questions clearly, but the group was too large.
Manager: Good. Write that accurately. We need feedback we can act on, not a dramatic headline.
Assistant: I see the difference. My summary turned several useful comments into one negative judgement.
Manager: It happens easily. Listening fairly means preserving the parts that complicate our first impression, even when a shorter story would fit neatly into the message box.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada qarovchining pozitsiyasini ikki gap bilan adolatli yetkazing, noto‘g‘ri xulosani tuzating.

Mezon: Said va told + object to‘g‘ri. · Ko‘chirma inkor va tasdiq bor. · Pozitsiyaning muhim sharti yo‘qolmagan.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda mijozning fikrini rahbar uchun xolis paragrafga aylantiring.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · Say/tell boshqaruvi to‘g‘ri. · Ijobiy va tanqidiy fikrlar ikkalasi saqlangan.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The customer said she did not understand the online instructions, but she told the assistant that the practical demonstration was helpful. She also said she wanted more time to practise before the final task. Her comments did not describe the whole workshop as useless. She praised the tutor's clear answers while pointing out that the group was too large. A fair summary should preserve this mixed view. The centre could review the written instructions, allow extra practice and consider group size. Changing the practical demonstration would not address the concern she actually raised. Accurate reporting helps the team improve the right part of the service rather than react to an exaggerated headline.

Reading · The Promise in the Interview

On Monday, the organiser told our student reporter, 'We are preparing a free skills fair. We have contacted local employers, and we will publish the programme on Friday.' The reporter's draft said the organiser was preparing the fair, had contacted employers and would publish the programme on Friday. Those changes preserved the timing of the interview. However, the draft also said every employer would offer a job. That promise had never been made. The organiser had said employers could explain training routes, not guarantee employment. We corrected the article before publication and kept a short quotation beside the summary. The exercise showed that accurate grammar does not automatically produce accurate journalism. A sentence can have perfect backshift and still report an invented commitment. Our editor now asks two questions: does the language match the original time, and does the claim match what was actually said? Both checks matter more than making the event sound impressive.

Listening · Passing on the Engineer's Update

Supervisor: What did the engineer tell you yesterday?
Assistant: She said she was checking the damaged pump. She said she had ordered a replacement part and could return on Thursday.
Supervisor: Did she promise the system would work that day?
Assistant: No. She said she would test it after fitting the part, but she couldn't guarantee the result before that test.

Supervisor: Good. Our notice must not turn an expected visit into a confirmed reopening.
Assistant: I wrote that the engineer had ordered the part and would return for further work. Is that clear enough?
Supervisor: Add that testing is still required. Residents need to understand the remaining condition.
Assistant: Understood. The original update was careful, but it would be easy to make it sound more certain while shortening it.
Supervisor: Exactly. A summary should remove extra words, not remove the uncertainty that keeps the message honest.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada intervyuni ertasi kuni xabar sifatida yetkazing, va’da bilan imkonni ajrating.

Mezon: Present→past va perfect→past perfect to‘g‘ri. · Will→would hamda can→could misoli bor. · Kafolatlanmagan natija kafolat sifatida berilmagan.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda muhandisning kechagi xabarini aholiga xolis yetkazing.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z yozilgan. · Kamida uch backshift shakli bor. · Shart va aniq sana ma’nosi saqlangan.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The engineer said she was checking the damaged pump and had ordered a replacement part. She told the team she could return on Thursday. She did not promise that the system would reopen that day. Instead, she said she would test it after the part was fitted and could not guarantee the result before testing. Our public notice should preserve that condition. An expected visit is evidence of progress, but it is not a confirmed completion date. The team should publish another update after the test. This wording may sound less exciting than a reopening announcement, yet it gives residents a more accurate basis for planning.

Reading · Today Depends on the Reader

At the reception desk on Tuesday, Sara said, 'My class meets here every week, and I am bringing my materials tomorrow.' I wrote the message that afternoon for another receptionist in the same building. I could report that Sara said her class meets here every week because the timetable was still current. However, when I forwarded the note to a colleague in another building on Thursday, 'tomorrow' and 'here' no longer worked without explanation. I changed them to 'Wednesday' and 'the community centre'. The class schedule had not changed, but the reader's time and place had. This is why reported speech cannot always be handled by a mechanical replacement table. A clear date may be safer than 'the next day', especially in a forwarded message. We also checked that 'her materials' referred to Sara, not the receptionist. The final note was slightly longer, but it stopped asking readers to solve a small geographical and grammatical puzzle.

Listening · The Forwarded Room Message

Coordinator: Nargiza says her workshop starts at six. That timetable is still correct, so keep the present tense in today's reminder.
Assistant: Yesterday she wrote, 'I will bring my samples here tomorrow.' We're sending this to the remote volunteers now. Should I keep here?
Coordinator: No. Say she would bring her samples to the arts centre today. Better still, include Wednesday's date so the message remains clear if it is forwarded later.
Assistant: And my becomes her because the samples belong to Nargiza.
Coordinator: Exactly. Don't change words simply because a chart tells you to. Think about who is speaking, where the reader is and when they read it.
Assistant: The facts stay the same, but the reference points move.
Coordinator: Yes. A message should travel better than a suitcase without a label. Every reader needs to know whose materials are going to which place on which day.

Speaking

90 soniyada seshanbadagi xabarni payshanba kuni boshqa binodagi kishiga yetkazing.

Mezon: Olmoshning egasi aniq. · Here/tomorrow aniq joy/sanaga o‘zgargan. · Dolzarb fakt presentda qolishi asoslangan.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda xabar uzatishda vaqt va joyni aniqlashtirish tamoyilini misol bilan tushuntiring.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · Dolzarb fakt va o‘tgan va’da ajratilgan. · Kim/qayer/qachon ishoralari noaniq emas.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Sara said her class meets at the community centre every week. The present tense is suitable because that schedule is still current. She also said on Tuesday that she would bring her materials on Wednesday. In a message forwarded on Thursday, keeping tomorrow would give the wrong day. Keeping here would also confuse a reader in another building. The report should name the community centre and use an explicit date. Her materials must clearly refer to Sara's belongings. These choices preserve the original meaning rather than mechanically changing every verb. A slightly longer message can be more efficient if it prevents several readers from asking the same clarification question.

Reading · The Survey behind the Numbers

Our student council surveyed commuters before requesting a new bus stop. Volunteers asked whether passengers felt safe at the current stop and where they waited during rain. They also asked how long the walk from the college took. The survey leader told volunteers to record answers exactly and avoid suggesting the 'right' response. One draft question began, 'Don't you agree the stop is terrible?' We removed it because it pushed people towards a complaint. The final results were mixed: many wanted shelter, while fewer wanted the stop moved. If our report simply said people disliked the stop, it would hide that distinction. The council asked us to explain how the questions had been worded. That was a useful reminder that numbers depend partly on the questions behind them. A survey can sound official while still being poorly designed. Our strongest request became a shelter, supported by specific answers rather than a large but vague pile of dissatisfaction.

Listening · Reporting an Access Enquiry

Receptionist: A visitor asked whether the gallery had step-free access. She also asked where the nearest accessible toilet was.
Manager: Did you explain the route clearly?
Receptionist: Yes. I told her to use the side entrance, but she asked if that door would be open after six.
Manager: That's an important detail. It normally closes at five thirty.
Receptionist: I said I would check rather than guess. She asked how she could contact someone on arrival.
Manager: Give her the duty phone number and confirm the entrance arrangement in writing.
Receptionist: I'll do that. Her questions show that simply saying 'accessible' isn't enough.
Manager: Exactly. People need a route that works at the time they visit, not only a description that is true during office hours.
Receptionist: I'll add opening times to our access information. A helpful adjective needs some practical details beside it.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada uch yo‘lovchi savoli va rahbar ko‘rsatmasini boshqa kishiga yetkazing.

Mezon: If/whether reported savoli bor. · Wh-savolda oddiy ega-fe’l tartibi. · Told + object + to buyruq shakli bor.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda galereya tashrifchisining so‘rovini navbatchi rahbarga yetkazing.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z yozilgan. · Uch reported savolda inversiya yo‘q. · Ko‘rsatma va yechilmagan muammo aniq.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

A visitor asked whether the gallery offered step-free access and where the nearest accessible toilet was. The receptionist told her to use the side entrance. However, the visitor also asked if that door would be open after six, and it normally closes at five thirty. She then asked how she could contact someone when she arrived. We should confirm an entrance arrangement before reassuring her. The duty phone number and a written route would help. This enquiry shows why a general description such as accessible needs practical detail. Opening times, contact information and the actual route must work together for the visitor's particular journey.

Reading · The Meeting without a Miracle

At our repair club meeting, the coordinator asked members to describe problems honestly. She told us not to promise repairs before checking the items. One volunteer offered to assess electrical equipment, while another refused to handle appliances without the required training. The refusal was sensible, not unhelpful. A third member admitted losing a customer's label and promised to contact the owner. Nobody denied that the mistake had caused confusion. We suggested using numbered trays so each item stayed with its paperwork. The minutes recorded these actions rather than a vague statement that everyone had discussed quality. That distinction matters after a meeting: people need to know who offered, who agreed and who still needs support. A cheerful atmosphere is valuable, but it cannot substitute for clear commitments. The club did not discover a miracle system that evening. It agreed on three small changes that people could actually carry out before the next session.

Listening · The Event Debrief

Chair: Please summarise the promises from yesterday, not just the complaints.
Secretary: The caterer apologised for arriving late and offered to refund the delivery fee. She denied ignoring our calls; her phone had lost power.
Chair: And the venue manager?
Secretary: He promised to provide a direct contact number next time. He asked us to send the final guest count two days earlier and told us not to block the service entrance.
Chair: Did we agree?
Secretary: Yes. We also admitted changing the count at the last minute. Lara suggested appointing one contact person for all suppliers.
Chair: Good. Include that shared responsibility.
Secretary: I will. A report that makes every problem somebody else's fault would be simpler, but less useful.
Chair: Exactly. We need a plan for the next event, not a carefully formatted collection of excuses with our logo at the top.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada yig‘ilishdagi to‘rtta aniq amalni reported verbs bilan yetkazing.

Mezon: Asked to va told not to to‘g‘ri. · Offer/promise/refuse dan biri + to. · Suggest/admit/deny dan biri + -ing.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda tadbirdan keyingi kelishuvlarni xolis hisobot qiling.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · To-infinitive va -ing boshqaruvi to‘g‘ri. · Ikkala tomon mas’uliyati va kelishuvlar saqlangan.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The caterer offered to refund the delivery fee after arriving late. She denied ignoring the team's calls and explained that her phone had lost power. The venue manager promised to provide a direct contact number. He asked the team to send the final guest count two days earlier and told them not to block the service entrance. The team admitted changing the number at the last minute. Lara suggested appointing one person to communicate with all suppliers. These points should appear together in the report because responsibility was shared. Clear commitments will help the next event more than a summary that presents the organisers as faultless and everyone else as the problem.

Reading · The Rumour about the Youth Room

A message claimed that the youth room would close permanently. The actual meeting notes said something different. The manager had explained that repairs would take two weeks and that activities could use the library during that period. A parent had asked whether evening sessions would continue. The manager had promised to check staffing, not guaranteed that every session would run. Someone shortened this into 'They don't know what they're doing', and the temporary move became a permanent closure in later messages. Our youth council published a correction with the confirmed dates and the unresolved question clearly separated. We also asked members not to forward claims without the original notice. The response was mostly positive, although one person complained that the correction was less dramatic than the rumour. That was true. Accurate information often has fewer villains and more conditions. It is still the information people need when arranging transport, work and childcare around a real service.

Listening · The Review Panel's Notes

Reporter: The panel said our project had useful aims but needed a clearer budget. They did not reject the idea completely.
Team leader: What questions did they ask?
Reporter: They asked how we would maintain the equipment and whether volunteers had agreed to the schedule. They told us to separate one-time costs from monthly expenses.
Team leader: Did they offer another review?
Reporter: Yes. They offered to read a revised plan next month. They also suggested testing demand with a small pilot first.
Team leader: Then our next message should explain the work required, not announce either a victory or a disaster.
Reporter: Exactly. I have kept their written comments beside my summary so we can check the meaning.
Team leader: Good. We should be proud of the useful parts and honest about the gaps.
Reporter: A conditional opportunity is still an opportunity. It just arrives with homework rather than a celebratory ribbon.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda loyiha guruhiga komissiya javobini yetkazing.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z yozilgan. · Kamida uch xil reporting qolipi bor. · Ijobiy baho va talablar ikkalasi aniq.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The panel said our project had useful aims but needed a clearer budget. They asked how the equipment would be maintained and whether volunteers had accepted the schedule. They told us to distinguish initial costs from monthly expenses. They also suggested a small pilot to test demand before expansion. Importantly, they offered to review a revised plan next month. This was neither an unconditional approval nor a complete rejection. Our team should use the written comments to prepare specific changes. A fair summary will help everyone understand the opportunity and the work attached to it. We should report both the positive assessment and the conditions instead of choosing the more dramatic version.

A neighbourhood chat reported that the small swimming pool was closing permanently. The claim began after an instructor told a parent that lessons would stop during roof repairs. The parent wrote, 'She said the pool would close next month.' Another member removed the time reference when forwarding the message. By evening, several families had cancelled future bookings. The manager asked who had announced a permanent closure. Nobody could identify such a statement. She explained that the building would close for twelve days and asked families to check the official timetable before changing plans. The instructor confirmed that she had meant a temporary pause. A student reporter interviewed both speakers and published their words with dates. The correction did not accuse the parent of inventing the entire story; it showed how an accurate detail had lost an essential limit as it travelled.

Reading · The People behind the Repair Table

A repair cafe depends on more than the person who holds the screwdriver. Our team includes a volunteer who welcomes visitors and a coordinator who keeps each item with its paperwork. The objects that arrive often carry stories as well as faults. Last week, a lamp that belonged to a retired teacher needed a new switch. The volunteer who assessed it asked about its history before discussing the repair. That conversation did not replace technical judgement, but it helped explain why the owner preferred repair to replacement. We also need a system that records limits honestly. Items that cannot be repaired safely are returned with an explanation, not a vague promise. Some visitors are disappointed, yet clear boundaries protect trust. The most useful volunteer is not always the one who says yes fastest. It may be the person who asks the question that prevents a well-intentioned but unsuitable repair.

Listening · Choosing a Volunteer Role

Advisor: We need someone who can listen patiently at the welcome desk. Technical knowledge isn't essential for that role.
Applicant: I enjoy talking to people, but I don't want to give repair advice that I am not qualified to give.
Advisor: That's the right boundary. You will record the problem that the visitor describes and pass the item to a trained volunteer.
Applicant: What about customers who expect an immediate answer?
Advisor: Explain the process and introduce them to the person who handles assessments. We use a form that makes the next step clear.
Applicant: I can do that. I worked at a library where people often needed help finding the right service.
Advisor: Useful experience. The welcome desk is not just a place that produces a friendly smile. It connects a person's question with the team member who can actually help.
Applicant: Then I would like to try a supervised session.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada uch ko‘ngilli rolini relative clause bilan ajrating va bitta chegarani tushuntiring.

Mezon: Who odamni aniqlaydi. · Which/that buyumni yoki tizimni aniqlaydi. · Uch gap ortiqcha takrorsiz bog‘langan.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda kutib olish rolini yangi ko‘ngilliga tavsiflang.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · Kamida uch defining relative clause to‘g‘ri. · Rol vazifasi va vakolat chegarasi aniq.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The welcome volunteer is the person who connects visitors with the right member of the repair team. They record the problem that each visitor describes and keep the item with its form. They should not give technical advice that goes beyond their training. A customer who expects an immediate answer can be introduced to the volunteer who carries out assessments. This role requires patience and clear communication, not just a friendly manner. The form that the team uses should explain the next step. A supervised first session would help a new volunteer practise these tasks and learn when to ask for support rather than make an uncertain promise.

Reading · The Market Archive

Our town archive is collecting stories from traders whose families have worked in the market for generations. The project began in the cafe where several retired sellers meet every Thursday. One woman remembers the winter when the old roof collapsed under heavy snow. Another recalls the year when refrigerated vans changed the fish trade. These memories connect personal experience with changes in the town, but dates sometimes conflict. The archivist records uncertainty rather than forcing every account into one neat timeline. A photograph whose owner is unknown can still be useful if its limits are stated. The team asks contributors to explain where their knowledge comes from: direct experience, a relative's story or a later newspaper report. This does not make the interviews less warm. It makes the archive more trustworthy. A market is a place where stories travel quickly; an archive is a place where they should also arrive with a source.

Listening · The Community Mentor

Host: Tell us about the person whose advice changed your project.
Designer: Her name is Farida. She runs the workshop where I first tested my furniture designs.
Host: Do you remember the day when you met her?
Designer: Yes. I brought a chair whose legs looked elegant but were unstable. She asked who would actually sit on it.
Host: A practical question.
Designer: Very practical. We visited a centre where older people meet, and they explained what made a chair comfortable to use.
Host: Did that change your priorities?
Designer: Completely. I still care about appearance, but I now start with the people whose daily routines the object will enter.
Host: So advice became observation.
Designer: Exactly. Farida didn't give me a perfect design. She showed me a place where I could ask better questions. My chair stopped being a drawing that expected humans to adapt politely to it.

Speaking

Mezon: Whose dan keyin egalik oti bor. · Where joyga, when vaqtga ishora qiladi. · Uch bog‘lanishning oldingi oti aniq.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda bozor arxivi uchun ma’lumot yig‘ish tamoyilini yozing.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z yozilgan. · Whose/where/when uchalasi to‘g‘ri. · Manba va noaniqlik mezoni aniq.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The market archive should preserve the voices of traders whose experience connects personal lives with local history. Interviews can begin in the cafe where retired sellers already meet. Contributors may remember the year when a new roof was built or a different trading system appeared. Their dates may not always agree, and that uncertainty should remain visible. A photograph whose owner is unknown should be labelled honestly rather than given an invented history. The team should ask whether each detail comes from direct experience, a family story or a written source. This approach respects contributors while giving future readers enough information to understand the evidence and its limits.

Reading · The Volunteer We Almost Missed

The volunteer who arrived late to our planning meeting became the person we most needed. Kamila, who works at a bus depot, noticed that our event timetable ignored the last service to the northern neighbourhoods. The schedule we had prepared looked convenient for the organising team, but several visitors would have struggled to get home. Our chair suggested simply telling people to leave early. Kamila argued that they should not have to miss the final discussion because of where they lived. We moved the closing session forward and kept an optional social hour afterwards. The change, which cost nothing, made the event more accessible. It also challenged our assumption that useful planning knowledge comes only from senior organisers. Kamila had no formal role in transport policy. She knew the route people used every evening. The person who notices an ordinary practical detail may contribute more than the person whose presentation has the most impressive title.

Listening · The Book You Recommended

Friend: I finished the book you recommended. The writer, who used to manage a community garden, gives very practical examples.
Reader: Did the chapter about volunteers help?
Friend: Yes. The checklist she includes is useful, but the advice about opening hours mattered most. Our garden closes before many people finish work.
Reader: That's a problem we can discuss at Saturday's meeting.
Friend: Could you come with me? You know the members who attend in the evening, and they trust your judgement.
Reader: I can. Bring the notes you made, but let's ask people about their needs before proposing a fixed solution.
Friend: Agreed. The book gives us questions, not a universal timetable.

Reader: Exactly. A useful guide, which can save us time, still needs local knowledge. Otherwise, we may copy a beautiful plan that belongs to a completely different neighbourhood.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada Kamila hissasini relative clauses bilan tushuntiring va rejalashdagi taxminni baholang.

Mezon: Ega who tushirilmagan. · To‘ldiruvchi that/which bir joyda tabiiy tushirilgan. · Non-defining gap mazmunni qo‘shimcha ravishda ochadi.

Writing

Do‘stingiz Aziza ga 45–55 so‘zli norasmiy email yozing: shanba yig‘ilishiga taklif qiling, kitobdagi muammoni ayting va bir aniq yordam so‘rang. Bu ichki format mashqi.

Mezon: 45–55 so‘z; samimiy salom va yakun bor. · Taklif, muammo va bitta aniq iltimos bor. · Bir defining va bir non-defining relative clause to‘g‘ri.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Hi Aziza,
The book you lent me helped with our garden project. Its author, who managed a similar garden, explains why opening hours matter. Could you join Saturday's meeting and describe what evening visitors need? Please bring your timetable notes. Let's ask the group before choosing new hours.
Thanks,
Malika

Reading · A Venue beyond the Photograph

The Riverside Centre, where our association held its first public meeting, looks ideal in promotional photographs. Its manager, whose team welcomes many community groups, is also helpful. However, a recent visit showed why a venue decision needs more than an attractive image. The room to which we were initially directed was upstairs, and the lift was too small for some mobility equipment. The room downstairs, which had fewer seats, offered easier access and a quieter entrance. We asked whether furniture could be rearranged to increase capacity without narrowing the route. The manager agreed to measure the space with us. This was not a dispute about whether the centre was 'good' or 'bad'. It was a discussion about which room suited our particular event. The people with whom we consulted included wheelchair users and parents with pushchairs. Their observations turned a general promise of welcome into a practical plan that could be checked.

Listening · The Museum Room Request

Organiser: The curator, whose exhibition opens next month, would like our discussion to happen beside the display.
Access advisor: The gallery, where the display is installed, has a narrow entrance. The people for whom we are planning include users of larger wheelchairs.
Organiser: Could we use the education room instead?
Access advisor: Yes. That room has a wide doorway, and the portable display could be brought there. The curator should confirm which objects can move safely.
Organiser: I will write to her with those questions. The person we spoke to yesterday mentioned folding chairs too.
Access advisor: Ask how many can be arranged while keeping a clear route. Capacity is not simply the number of chairs in storage.
Organiser: Good point. We need a plan people can use, not a photograph of every chair we own squeezed into one impressive rectangle.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Dear Ms Karim,
I am writing about the room for our association's public meeting. The Riverside Centre, where we held our first event, remains our preferred venue. However, the upstairs room may not suit participants who use larger mobility equipment.
Could you confirm whether the downstairs room is available on 18 June from two to five? We would also appreciate a seating plan showing how many chairs can be arranged while keeping a clear route from the entrance. The members with whom we consulted emphasised the importance of that space.
Your team, whose assistance we value, offered to measure the room with us. Would Tuesday afternoon be convenient for a short visit? Please also confirm whether any furniture can be removed temporarily.
Thank you for helping us plan an event that all participants can use comfortably.
Yours sincerely,
Malika Saidova

Reading · The Queue Outside the Clinic

People waiting outside the community clinic had no shelter during last month's rain. A temporary canopy installed near the entrance now offers some protection. The clinic also introduced numbered cards, which reduced arguments about places in the queue. However, the new system created another problem: visitors unable to hear the number calls sometimes missed their turn. A volunteer suggested a visual display showing the current number. Staff tested a simple whiteboard before buying equipment, which allowed them to discover practical issues cheaply. The board placed behind the reception glass reflected light and was difficult to read. Moving it beside the door solved much of the problem. These changes show that an improvement can help one group while overlooking another. The team now asks visitors using different communication methods to test each stage. A fair queue is not created merely by giving everyone a number; people also need a reliable way to know when that number matters.

Listening · The Exhibition Labels Test

Designer: Visitors reading the first display spent much longer there than we expected.
Researcher: Was that interest or difficulty?
Designer: We asked them. Several said the text was too small, which changed our interpretation of the timing.
Researcher: Good. Time spent near a display doesn't explain itself.
Designer: Labels printed in a larger size were easier to use. But the version placed low on the wall was missed by people standing behind others.
Researcher: Then we need to test position as well as size.
Designer: Exactly. The volunteers helping today will observe from several heights and distances.
Researcher: Include people using seats or mobility equipment, not just standing staff.
Designer: We will. The first result looked like a success until we asked what the visitors were actually experiencing. A long visit can mean fascination, but it can also mean somebody is trying very hard to read three stubborn lines.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada navbat tizimining foydasi va cheklovini ixcham aniqlovchi gaplar bilan tahlil qiling.

Mezon: Butun fikrga which bir marta ishlatilgan. · -ing bilan qisqartirilgan aniqlovchi bor. · V3 aniqlovchi to‘g‘ri otga tegishli.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda ko‘rgazma kuzatuvidagi noto‘g‘ri taxminni tahlil qiling.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z yozilgan. · Ikki reduced relative va gapga which bor. · Kuzatuv va talqin farqi dalillangan.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Visitors spending a long time at a display are not necessarily highly engaged. In our test, several people were struggling with small text, which changed the meaning of the observation. Labels printed in a larger size helped, but those placed too low were hidden by other visitors. The next test should include people standing, sitting and using mobility equipment. Volunteers observing from different positions can identify problems that a single viewpoint misses. We should combine timing with direct questions about the experience. Otherwise, a measurement that looks positive may conceal difficulty. Useful evaluation asks what the behaviour means, not only how long it lasts.

Reading · The Park Survey We Redesigned

The first park survey reached people who already attended weekend events. Residents whose working hours included Saturdays were largely absent. The committee initially called the results representative, which overstated what the evidence could show. We redesigned the survey with short interviews at the bus stop where commuters waited and a paper version delivered to nearby buildings. Responses collected through the new routes raised different priorities: lighting, toilets and weekday seating mattered more than another festival stage. This did not make the first respondents wrong. It showed that the people we had asked were only part of the community. The report now explains each collection method and the groups still missing from the sample. The council officer to whom we sent it requested a follow-up discussion. A survey becomes more credible when it admits its limits. The most polished chart cannot give a voice to residents who were never asked a question in the first place.

Listening · The Accessible Film Discussion

Host: The films selected by our club cover several neighbourhood stories. The filmmaker who opens the programme will join us online.
Member: Will the captions be available for the discussion as well as the films?
Host: That's a good question. The system we're using supports captions, but we need someone to check them.
Member: My colleague, whose job includes live caption review, may help. The room where we meet also needs a clear view of the screen.
Host: We can test that on Thursday.
Member: Please include participants sitting at the side, not only those in the centre.
Host: Agreed. Last time, we checked the equipment but not every viewing position, which left some people with a poor experience.
Member: Then the test should follow the audience's journey from entrance to discussion. Access is not one feature we switch on at the beginning and forget.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Dear Mr Ahmed,
I am writing about the park survey that our committee recently revised. The original responses came mainly from people who attend Saturday events. Residents whose jobs keep them busy at weekends were not adequately represented, which limited the conclusions we could draw.
We have now added interviews at the bus stop where commuters wait and paper forms delivered to nearby buildings. The responses collected through these routes place greater emphasis on lighting, toilets and weekday seating.
Could you arrange a meeting to review these priorities before the next spending decision? We would also appreciate information about groups that the council believes are still missing from the survey. The report, which explains both collection methods, is ready for discussion.
Thank you for considering a broader evidence base rather than treating the first chart as a complete picture.
Yours sincerely,
Malika Saidova

A park survey asked visitors which benches they liked. Most responses praised a new wooden bench beside the pond. The council planned to copy it throughout the park. Then an access volunteer, whose group had not received the survey, pointed out that the path to that bench was too narrow for some mobility aids. People who could not reach it were unlikely to evaluate it. The council invited another group, including residents who usually entered through the north gate, to walk the proposed sites. They preferred benches with arms that made standing easier. The wooden design was comfortable, but its popularity did not settle every design question. The revised plan includes both wider paths and different seat heights. Consultation is stronger when it reaches people for whom the existing arrangement already creates a barrier.

Reading · Why We Changed the Workshop

Our photography club decided to redesign its beginner workshop after several learners avoided returning for a second session. They enjoyed taking pictures but disliked spending most of the evening watching slides. The tutor had hoped to explain every camera setting before allowing practice. That plan seemed thorough, yet it asked beginners to remember too much without using it. We invited learners to describe one task they wanted to achieve. Most wanted to photograph people indoors without producing a bright forehead and a dark background. The new session begins with that practical problem. Learners try a simple adjustment, compare results and then discuss the principle. We still expect them to understand the settings, but explanation follows an immediate need. The change is not an argument against theory. It is an argument for a sequence that makes theory useful. A camera course should leave people wanting to take photographs, not merely admiring the instructor's impressive collection of menus.

Listening · The Volunteer's Choice

Advisor: What do you enjoy doing in a group?
Applicant: I enjoy organising practical tasks, but I avoid speaking to a large audience without preparation.
Advisor: We need someone to coordinate the equipment table. Would you like to try that?
Applicant: Yes. I hope to learn more about the tools, though I don't expect to become an expert immediately.
Advisor: We want you to record loans and ask trained volunteers about technical questions. We don't want you to guess.
Applicant: That sounds manageable. I would prefer to observe one session before taking responsibility.
Advisor: Sensible. We encourage new members to ask questions, and we suggest keeping a short list of unfamiliar items.
Applicant: Good. I like learning through useful work.
Advisor: Then this role may suit you. Confidence can grow from a clear task; it doesn't need to arrive fully developed with your name badge.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada o‘quv mashg‘ulotini yaxshilashni taklif qiling: yoqadigan ish, reja va o‘quvchidan kutilgan amal.

Mezon: Enjoy/avoid + -ing to‘g‘ri. · Decide/hope + to-infinitive to‘g‘ri. · Want/expect + object + to bor.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda fotografiya kursining yangi tuzilishini dalil bilan qo‘llab-quvvatlang.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · Uch fe’l qolipi to‘g‘ri. · Taklif o‘quvchi dalili va cheklov bilan asoslangan.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

The club decided to begin its workshop with a practical indoor photograph. Learners enjoy taking pictures, but they avoid returning when the session feels like a long tour of camera menus. The tutor should ask them to identify one problem and help them to test a simple adjustment. They can then compare results before studying the explanation. This does not mean removing theory. It means connecting theory to a task learners want to achieve. I would also suggest keeping the first practice short so everyone has time to discuss it. A successful introductory session should encourage people to continue learning rather than convince them that photography requires memorising everything at once.

Reading · Learning from a Broken Display

The museum let our student team test a new interactive display before opening it to visitors. We could explore the controls, but we had to avoid changing the stored information. One unexpected screen message made us laugh: it congratulated us on selecting no options at all. The joke revealed a real problem. The display allowed people to continue without making a meaningful choice. We went through the activity again to identify the point where instructions became unclear. Several students were interested in improving the wording, while others focused on the size of the buttons. Instead of arguing about personal preference, we asked two first-time users to try the display. Their difficulties helped us decide what to change. Testing did not prove that our final version would suit everyone, but it gave us better evidence than guessing. A machine can respond quickly and still fail to explain what a person is supposed to do.

Listening · Preparing the Repair Demonstration

Leader: Let me explain the demonstration before we start. You can handle the sample parts, but you must ask before touching the live equipment.
Volunteer: I'm interested in learning how the checks work. Can I stand near the technician to see clearly?
Leader: Yes. We have moved the table to create more space. Don't be afraid of asking a basic question.
Volunteer: The technician's joke made everyone relax last time. That helped people admit they didn't understand.
Leader: Exactly. We want the group to learn, not perform confidence. After watching the demonstration, you can practise on the disconnected sample.
Volunteer: I'll bring my notebook to record the steps.
Leader: Good. A useful note should explain the reason for a check as well as its order. Remember, recognising a tool is different from knowing when and why to use it. Accuracy matters more than finishing first.

Reading · When Instructions Become Work

Reading the instructions for our booking form took longer than completing the form itself. The guide was accurate, but it was too dense to use quickly at the reception desk. Important warnings sat between background explanations and technical definitions. We tested a shorter version with new volunteers. Finding the next step became easier, although some unusual cases still required the full guide. The solution was not to delete complexity entirely. We created a short action sheet and linked each section to the detailed reference. Using plain language helped people notice the exceptions instead of hiding them in a wall of text. The new sheet was clear enough to support routine tasks, but not broad enough to answer every possible question. That limit was stated at the top. Good instructions do not promise to remove all judgement. They make ordinary decisions easier and show users when to seek help. Our reception desk now has fewer pages and fewer panicked whispers.

Listening · The Feedback Form Debate

Coordinator: Collecting feedback is useful, but our form is too long to finish before people leave.
Researcher: Shortening it would help. What decisions do you need the answers for?
Coordinator: We need to know whether the session was clear and what people want to practise next.
Researcher: Then two focused questions may be enough to guide the next session. It's important to leave space for an unexpected concern too.

Coordinator: Is that enough information to evaluate the whole programme?
Researcher: No. A quick exit form is not detailed enough to judge long-term change. We need a later follow-up for that.
Coordinator: So different questions need different methods.
Researcher: Exactly. Asking fewer questions is not automatically better, but asking twenty questions without knowing how you will use the answers is a very organised way to collect dust. We can pilot the shorter version next week.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada yo‘riqnoma yoki anketa sifatini maqsadga qarab baholang.

Mezon: Gerund ega sifatida ishlatilgan. · Too … to va enough … to farqlangan. · Adjective + to bilan baho dalillangan.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda qisqa so‘rovning foydasi va chegarasini tahlil qiling.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · Gerund ega va ikki too/enough qolipi bor. · Qisqa va uzoq muddatli baholash ajratilgan.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Collecting feedback is useful only when the team knows how the answers will inform decisions. Our current form is too long to complete before participants leave. Two focused questions could be enough to improve the next session: was the explanation clear, and what needs more practice? It is also important to allow an unexpected concern. However, an exit form is not detailed enough to demonstrate lasting change. That requires a later follow-up. Shortening the form should therefore support a specific purpose rather than create an illusion of complete evaluation. Asking fewer, better questions can save time while leaving room for a different method when deeper evidence is needed.

Qo‘shimcha bank

Faqat asosiy vazifa tugasa. Qo‘shimcha bank 120 daqiqaga qo‘shilmaydi; bugungi grammatik chegarani kengaytirmang.

Reading · A Different Way to Commute

I used to drive to the training centre, but the new parking fee encouraged me to try taking the bus. At first, I was not used to waiting outside in bad weather. I tried to read on the journey, but motion made that uncomfortable, so I tried listening to short audio lessons instead. That worked better. One morning, I stopped to buy a ticket and forgot to collect the receipt I needed for reimbursement. I remember telling the driver about my course, but not checking the machine. Now I set a reminder to keep the receipt. The change has not made every journey pleasant. Some buses are crowded, and the evening connection is unreliable. Still, I have stopped assuming that driving is always the only practical choice. A trial should allow mixed results. Otherwise, one wet morning becomes proof against buses, while years of traffic delays somehow count as normal life.

Listening · The Booking Software Trial

Manager: You used to keep bookings on paper. Are you used to working with the new software now?
Assistant: Mostly. I remember saving Tuesday's changes, but the screen didn't confirm them. I tried refreshing the page, which helped.
Manager: Did you remember to check the final list afterwards?
Assistant: Yes. One name was missing, so I stopped entering new bookings to investigate. I didn't stop to take a break.
Manager: Good distinction. What support would help?
Assistant: A clear error guide. We are trying to learn the system, but repeated guessing wastes time.
Manager: I'll request one from the provider.
Assistant: Please ask them to explain recovery steps, not only normal use. Most guides assume everything goes well.
Manager: Agreed. A manual that only describes perfect conditions is rather like an umbrella designed exclusively for sunny photographs. Please include this example in your written request.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Dear Support Manager,
Our reception team is getting used to working with your booking software after several years of paper records. We are trying to use it consistently, but the system sometimes gives no confirmation after changes are saved.
On Tuesday, an assistant remembered saving an updated list and tried refreshing the page. One name was still missing. She stopped entering further bookings to investigate and checked the final list carefully.
Could you provide a clear recovery guide covering missing confirmations and incomplete records? We would also appreciate a short training session focused on errors rather than normal operation. Please explain how staff can verify that an update has been stored without creating duplicate bookings.
We would be grateful for a reply by Friday so that we can plan next week's reception cover.
Yours faithfully,
Malika Saidova

Reading · The Shared Office Adjustment

Our charity recently moved into a shared office, and we are getting used to working beside two other teams. At first, small habits caused surprising tension. We turned the heating up while our neighbours opened a window. We depended on informal messages, but nobody knew who was responsible for locking up. After a meeting, we wrote a short agreement and had the faulty door lock replaced. We also got the meeting-room screen repaired instead of asking volunteers to fix it without training. The agreement includes turning lights off, looking after shared equipment and checking with other teams before moving furniture. These rules are not a substitute for courtesy, but they reduce repeated uncertainty. I am interested in how quickly trust improves when responsibilities become visible. A shared office does not require everyone to work in the same way. It requires people to notice where one team's convenient habit becomes another team's daily problem.

Listening · The Community Computer Desk

Volunteer: I'm getting used to helping people with very different levels of computer experience.
Coordinator: Good. Remember that being good at using a device doesn't automatically mean being good at explaining it.
Volunteer: I noticed that. I told one visitor to turn it off and on again, but I spoke too quickly.
Coordinator: Break the instruction into steps and let them try. What happened to the old printer?
Volunteer: We had it serviced yesterday. The technician replaced a worn part, so we didn't need a new machine.
Coordinator: Excellent. We depend on donations, so maintenance matters.
Volunteer: A visitor asked whether we could look after her laptop overnight.
Coordinator: Explain that we cannot store personal devices. She can bring it back during opening hours.
Volunteer: Clear boundaries again.
Coordinator: Yes. Helpful service means knowing what support we can provide, not taking on every responsibility that arrives in a bag.

Speaking

Ikki daqiqada umumiy ofisga moslashish va ta’mir buyurtmasi haqida gapiring.

Mezon: Getting used to + -ing to‘g‘ri. · Bitta ajraladigan va bitta ajralmaydigan phrasal verb bor. · Have/get + object + V3 xizmatni bildiradi.

Writing

100–120 so‘zda umumiy ofis kelishuvi nima uchun foydali ekanini tushuntiring.

Mezon: 100–120 so‘z bor. · Causative va get used to to‘g‘ri. · Uch phrasal/dependent birikma ma’noga mos.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Our team is getting used to sharing an office with two other organisations. We initially depended on informal messages, which left some responsibilities unclear. After discussing the problems, we had the faulty lock replaced and got the meeting-room screen repaired by a technician. The new agreement asks everyone to turn lights off, look after shared equipment and check before moving furniture. These rules help us cooperate without expecting identical working habits. They also show when professional help is needed. Being interested in repairs is not the same as being qualified to perform them. Clear responsibilities protect both equipment and relationships, leaving more time for the work our teams actually came to do.

Reading · A Better Welcome for New Members

Our community workshop wants to attract new members without overwhelming them. We used to begin with a long tour and ask everyone to remember every rule immediately. Several newcomers admitted feeling lost, although they appreciated the volunteers' friendliness. We decided to try offering a short welcome task instead. A trained member helps each person to label a sample item, find the correct storage place and practise recording a loan. Doing one complete task makes the wider system easier to understand. We still expect people to read the safety information, and they must not use unfamiliar equipment without guidance. The team also had damaged signs replaced and is getting used to explaining fewer details at once. Some experienced members worry that the new approach is too simple. We will therefore review errors and newcomer feedback after four sessions. The aim is not to remove standards. It is to help people reach them through a sequence they can actually follow.

Listening · The Training Proposal Review

Director: Why do you recommend changing the induction session?
Coordinator: New volunteers enjoy helping people, but they struggle to remember twenty procedures before trying any of them. I suggest starting with one supervised task.
Director: Would that be enough to prepare them?
Coordinator: Enough for a first step, not for independent work. We would still require them to read the safety guide and ask before using unfamiliar equipment.
Director: What else needs attention?
Coordinator: We should have the unclear signs replaced. We also need to stop assuming that silence means understanding.
Director: How will you check the new approach?
Coordinator: By observing errors, listening to feedback and asking volunteers to explain the next step in their own words.
Director: Good. Please send a written proposal with a four-session review point. A simpler beginning is useful if it leads to stronger understanding, not if it merely makes the timetable look less demanding.

Writing namuna — urinishdan keyin

Dear Ms Rahim,
I am writing to propose a revised introduction for new workshop volunteers. Several newcomers have admitted feeling overwhelmed by the number of procedures presented before they can practise anything.
I suggest beginning with one supervised task: labelling an item, finding its storage place and recording a loan. Completing this sequence should make the system easier to understand. Volunteers would still be required to read the safety guide and ask before using unfamiliar equipment.
We should also have the unclear signs replaced and stop treating silence as evidence of understanding. Could you approve a four-session trial of this approach? We would review errors, collect feedback and ask participants to explain the next step in their own words.
Please let me know whether the trial can begin next month and who should coordinate the review.
Yours sincerely,
Malika Saidova

Our chess club enjoys welcoming new players, but many leave after their first evening. The committee considered reducing the membership price. A volunteer suggested asking recent visitors about their experience before deciding. Several reported feeling lost because regular members began games immediately and expected newcomers to understand the pairing board. They did not mention the price. The committee agreed to try a welcome table and asked two experienced players to explain the system. Members who prefer starting immediately can still do so. The club also stopped describing the beginner session as a tournament, since that word made some visitors expect formal competition. Next month the committee plans to compare return visits and collect short comments. It hopes to make participation easier without promising that every visitor will become a regular member.
